Halloween has barely passed and we are already deep into the holiday season. Everywhere I go, I'm surrounded by an abundance of Christmas decorations. But I don't mind. I love the season. I did find it a bit strange when I was in the Silicon Valley to be walking around in such bright sunshine and mild weather. Probably because I grew up in New Jersey where the weather was more in keeping with what I considered a traditional holiday season.

In book 2 of the Silicon Valley Romance series, Corporate Chaos, Emma and Jake go on a Christmas vacation. You will get a chance to join them when Corporate Chaos is available early next year. About Book 1, Tangled Tech, I wanted to make you aware that I have discounted it from $5.99 to $4.99. Be sure to take advantage of this opportunity. To purchase this book, click the button below:

When Emma and Jake were working in Silicon Valley, there were still many farms and orchards. In fact the house they bought was a mile away from a cherry orchard. Emma was delighted when they bought cherries that were the size of plums. She once teased Jake about sharing after he ate almost an entire bag. But he laughed and told her that he had a good excuse. Cherries were his favorite fruit. I have to admit that they are pretty high on my list. What is your favorite fruit?

A little more information about myself. I live near Atlanta, Georgia with my husband and two adorable shipoos, where the female runs the household.

In addition to reading romance novels, I do enjoy a good mystery. I actually signed up for the Brit Box streaming service just to get their mystery series. Playing computer games takes up quite a few hours of my day. We can share and compare favorites, and I'm going to describe mine in future newsletters. But send me an email and let me know what your favorite game is and why you like it. I can be reached at bbouldin711@gmail.com

I hope you have a wonderful Thanksgiving.

Happy reading,

Barbara
