set in Silicon Valley circa 1985

We are firmly launched into 2025, and I am looking forward to all the promise and challenge that it will bring. But right now, at this moment, we are in January. For me it is a month to retreat indoors and be grateful that I telecommute. It's been unusually cold in Georgia, reminding me of growing up in New Jersey. Then I would hope for snow and days off from school. I would sled, skate and enjoy snowball fights, especially when I won. Then there were hot drinks of cocoa which have been replaced by tea but always accompanied by cookies. I spent many hours, sitting by the fireplace, reading Nancy Drew mystery stories, and now it's no surprise that I read romance novels. Although I have been known to turn my attention to a cozy mystery.

About books, I want to share with you that Corporate Chaos is still available for preorder and will remain discounted from $4.99 to $0.99 until release day!

Emma and Jake barely know it's winter. They are consumed with fighting off peers who want their jobs. And humoring crazed CEOs with nutty and wild ideas like developing a ring mouse that could be worn. Jake's twins do grab their attention and bring them back to the realities of everyday life whenever they irritate their schoolteachers. But for Emma and Jake their love shines through it all.

You can read about their success and obstacles in Book 2 of the series.

I was wondering how you spend the month of January, outdoor sports or cozy indoor activities. What's your favorite pastime?. Do you have a special family or friend activity? In my family, I have to confess that besides book reading, there is quite a bit of computer game playing and binge watching.

However you spend your wintery January days, indoor or outside, I want to wish you a Happy New Year.

*Emma and Jake Want to Wish Everyone a HAPPY
New Year*

Happy Reading,

Barbara
